Quick Recap of this Versatile Product

Medium-density fiberboard, or MDF, is an engineered wood product made from extracted wood fibers from plantation wood and forest waste, wax, and resin, all bonded together under high heat and pressure. As opposed to conventional solid wood, MDF has a very even and smooth surface and, therefore, can be used in various applications. MDF boards come in different thicknesses; they have good screw-holding properties and can be easily cut with CNC cutting machines. They are fashioned into many designs, making them suitable for furniture components, cabinetry, and trim work.
